

Monica Adair is the co-founder of Acre Architects, a practice built on exploring Storied Architecture. The Acre's projects develop the importance of creating our own stories, and explore how the power of the story can convey strong and deep-felt emotions that are key to the structure that form our lives.

The practice was born out of the evolution of the Acre Collective. The idea for the collective started on a rooftop in Brooklyn, New York, where a group of artists, writers, thinkers and designers realized that – working together – they could contribute more significantly than any one of them working alone. Conceived as a fresh and flexible way to tackle projects and ideas, the collective brings together the right team for the right project.
